why all classes of society turned out on the occasion. When, however, an execution took place, only the officers of the law remained, so that the sensational scenes depicted in certain works are but fancy-pictures. Moreover, heresy was only one out of many offenses that were adjudged by the Inquisition. It took cognizance also of blasphemy, polygamy, usury, witcheraft, etc. How many of the victims put to death, suffered for these then reputed capital crimes, we have no means of ascertaining, the official records having been in great measure destroyed by Florente.

The Bishop concluded by citing proofs that the principle on which heretics were punished in Spain was recognized and acted on by all the Reformers; and he expressed the conviction that their followers to-day have as much to answer for as Catholics on the score of intolerance and persecution.
